Cannabis research, medical and legal booms drive up demand for new capital Share This All of a sudden, Chinese investors are eyeing as highly profitable investment opportunities in cannabis. Contrary to stereotype, China's influx of assets into the legal cannabis industry is accelerating. Now the largest economies in the world are converging to make cannabis manufacturing one of the hottest commodities in the lucrative global market. Data shows that the number of Chinese cannabis companies traded on the CSE reached 30 last week, up from 16 last year. The figure was much higher for the Canadian stocks with 112 — 29% higher than the Canadian average. As regulations become more liberal in North America, cannabis is emerging as a $140-billion industry by 2025, according to International Finance Corp. Earlier this year, the International Monetary Fund projected Canadian legal cannabis sales to reach $2.7 billion by 2030. With the American sale of recreational cannabis growing, and state-level approvals continuing to increase, Chinese investors have taken notice. Zhang Yunhao is a Chinese investor from Shenzhen, China. He saw a potential for investment in the global cannabis industry during a trip to Toronto in August, and came back impressed by the opportunities he saw. "While Canada is still in the early stage of legalization, what's happening is that the same generation of millennials and Gen Z in other countries are starting to become interested in cannabis and are buying for the first time," he said. "We want to take advantage of these trends by putting our money into the market." Zhang isn't the only one, as a number of Chinese businesses are now pouring money into the cannabis sector. Shuanglong, a Beijing-based company, is building a 550,000-square-foot facility for cannabis production. The facility will have capacity to produce up to 80,000 kilograms of cannabis products a year. Other Chinese companies are establishing partnerships with Canadian companies to develop cannabis products such as oils, edibles and beverages. Beijing-based Hunan f678ea9f9e
